

The unleavened bread used by the Jews for many centuries during the feast of the Passover, is of water and flour which comes to the Hebrew colony in Bath from Boston and looks and tastes like thin hard bread, or water crackers.