

Slow Money Maine:Forum on Building a Healthy Local Food Economy Jan. 7 at Adas Yoshuron

Adas Yoshuron Synagogue will host a panel discussion on Slow Money Maine on Thursday, January 7, 7-8:30 p.m.

Panelists Bonnie Rukin of Camden, Coordinator of Slow Money Maine, Samuel Kaymen, soil enthusiast and investor, and Jeff Wolovitz of Lincolnville, owner of Heiwa Tofu, will be joined by Rabbi Natan Margalit for this community forum, which is free and open to the public.

Slow Money takes its name from the Slow Food movement. It works to support local food economies by connecting investors with local food producers. The program will explore ways in which people can make the shift from a mass-produced, industrial food system to a more cooperative, local, and community-based food economy.

The speakers will provide their own unique perspectives on this innovative movement and Rabbi Margalit will offer a perspective on how Slow Money connects with core Jewish values and ideals. There will be time for question and answers and a wide-ranging discussion of our food economy, Judaism, health, and sustainability.
