Working Moms Should Have Some Answers

The 15 million married women in our society who have elected to work still receive a good deal of criticism, according to Frances L. Feldman, associate professor of social work at the University of Southern California.

Speaking before a seminar for business and professional women sponsored by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., Mrs. Feldman suggested that, "every woman who thinks about working must take into account certain factors.

"In the light of criticism and the impacts on family life, she needs to work out with members
