Biographical Information:

The Cohen's of Bangor, Maine, are descended from Nathan Cohen (b. 1844), the eldest child of Reuben Alperowitz. He immigrated to this country from the Lithuanian province of the Polish Commonwealth, which had only recently become part of the tsarist Empire of Russia. He sought a better life for his wife Rosa (b. 1840), and their children.

Nathan's decision to choose a new surname upon his arrival, in this country, is not surprising. Given the circumstances that he left in Russia, he likely did not identify with the Alperowitz name that had been imposed upon his family by that government. Moreover, it was common practice for immigrants to offer their tribal names to officials who asked for their name. Nathan had been descended from the kohen, traditionally the high priests of Israel who were entitled to certain religious privileges.

Nathan was the first member of his family to arrive in this country. He petitioned for naturalization on January 25, 1889 in the Penobscot County Superior Court in Bangor, and declared his oath to become a citizen of the United States of America on April 23, 1891.

Nathan's granddaughter, Pauline Cohen, established this collection with photographs, and other materials, bequeathed to the Bangor Public Library after her death on January 15, 2006.

Pauline Cohen was born on November 2, 1910, the second child of Jacob and Alice Cohen of 50 East Summer Street in Bangor, Maine. Ever the outstanding scholar, Pauline continued her studies with a post-secondary education at the University of Maine, and Harvard University. This brilliant woman was elected into both the honor society of Phi Kappa Phi, and Phi Beta Kappa.

Pauline dedicated her life to the field of education, and much of her time and energy to her students in Bangor, Maine. With the creation of this Cohen Family Collection, she shares her family's legacy of community commitment, and love of country with those who live in Bangor today.

Eunice (Cohen) Morris, sister to Pauline, has generously offered to identify many of the individuals in Pauline's photographs. She has also given additional materials for the Cohen Family Collection from her personal documents. These materials further indicate the level of involvement of the Cohen family within the communities wherever they reside.

Eunice was born on March 21, 1921, the youngest child of Jacob and Alice Cohen. Like her older siblings before her, Eunice attended the University of Maine, graduating with the class of 1943.

Eunice married Jerome Morris. Together they raised their three children in Grand Concord, New York. Eunice later moved to the state of Rhode Island where she spent almost twenty years volunteering in the service of senior citizens. She has traveled extensively as a Women's Initiative Spokesperson for the AARP.

Eunice (Cohen) Morris, and her children, perpetuate the Cohen legacy through their participation in, and service to, the communities in which they live. The Bangor Public Library thanks Ms. Morris for providing us with these photographs, and documents that comprise her contribution toward the Cohen Family Collection.

Contents:

This collection consists of materials gathered by Pauline Cohen, and Eunice (Cohen) Morris. It includes photographs, and letters, relating to the Cohen Family of Bangor, Maine. It also includes photographs, newspaper clippings, letters and ephemera relating to the family of Eunice (Cohen) Morris, and her career as a volunteer in the American Association of Retired Persons. It also includes photographs, newspaper clippings, and ephemera relating to Saul Shocket, and his Saul's Elite Training System (S.E.T.S.) business.

Arrangement:

This collection is organized along genealogical lines following the line of descent from Nathan Cohen, the first Alperowitz family member to immigrate to the United States. It continues to unfold with a specific focus upon the family of his son, Jacob Cohen. Because this particular branch of the family has provided the bulk of photographs and documents that comprise this collection, primacy must be given to this particular nuclear family to properly facilitate understanding of these materials. Items that depict or refer to Nathan's other children, and his siblings and their descendants, assume a more peripheral arrangement in accordance with their subject's relationship to the central couple Jacob and Alice Cohen.

The Pauline Cohen Series, contained in Box Eighteen, is divided into two distinct sections. The first section begins with a photograph, and biography, of Pauline Cohen. After this initial introduction to the Cohen Family Collection's original founder, the arrangement continues according to the line of descent from her grandfather, Nathan Cohen, the first family member to immigrate to Bangor, Maine, and in turn, her parents Jacob and Alice Cohen, and their children. Each sibling of Pauline's nuclear family, is introduced according to their family birth order, with group photographs following. Excerpts from Jordan S. Alpert's book, The Alpersts and Cohens of Bangor, Maine, provide important background information, and informative ancestral charts that properly orientate the researcher along these genealogical lines.

The second portion of the Pauline Cohen Series, also found in Box Eighteen, contains extended family members' photographs that have also been provided from the estate of Pauline Cohen. These photographs are subdivided into two distinct genealogical clusters. The first group of photographs represents Reuben Alperowitz's eldest child, Nathan, and family members from his line of descent. It includes Jacob Cohen's immediate family members. The second group of photographs represents Reuben Alperowitz's third child, Yankev Alperowitz, and family members from his line of descent. It includes Alice (Alperowitz) Cohen's immediate family members.

The Eunice Morris Series is housed in Box Nineteen. This series is comprised of three distinct segments. The first portion contains the photographs and ephemera donated by Eunice (Cohen) Morris pertaining to her family, the second portion contains materials pertaining to her career at the ARP, and the third portion contains photographs and materials pertaining to her nephews Saul Shocket, the son of her sister Sylvia (Cohen) Shocket, and Harold Silverman, the son of her sister Ada (Cohen) Silverman.
